GRACE CHURCH IN NEW YORK

Dear Friends,

Something of great importance coming up soon in the life of the church is the election of a Bishop Coadjutor for the Diocese of New York. In the Episcopal Church, a bishop coadjutor is an assistant bishop with the right to succeed when the diocesan (lead or head) bishop retires or resigns. Currently, the Rt. Rev. Mark Sisk is the Bishop of New York, and he has led the diocese as our chief pastor for ten years. At the diocesan convention last November, Bishop Sisk called for the election of a coadjutor, which is what a bishop will do when retirement comes in sight. Bishop Sisk is 69, and plans to serve for perhaps another three years. The hope is that working alongside his successor during those years will allow for a more orderly transition from this bishop to the next.

The election will take place at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine on Saturday, October 29. Five candidates have been nominated by the Committee to Elect a Bishop. Additionally, since none of these candidates are from the Diocese of New York, two others have been nominated "from the floor." Every parish in the diocese will send a delegation to elect one of the seven candidates. Delegates vote by orders: clergy and lay. The number of lay delegates is determined by the size of the parish. Grace Church has three, and they are Charlie Johnston, Sr. Warden; Sarah Cogan, Jr. Warden; and Paul Demartini, Clerk of the Vestry. Our clergy delegates are, of course, Ted, Linda, and yours truly. For an election to be declared, one candidate must win two-thirds of the clergy votes, and two-thirds of the lay votes. Sometimes it takes numerous ballots until the electing convention comes of a mind.

If you'd like to read up on all the candidates, you will find ample information at www.nybishopsearch2011.org. Don't hesitate to let me know what you think about who is right for our diocese.

See you in church.
